Professor LARRY DIAMOND, ’73, MA ’78, PHD ’80, is a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution and at the Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies, where he leads several programs on democracy at the Center for Democracy, Development, and the Rule of Law. A professor by courtesy of political science and sociology, Diamond teaches courses on democratic development and U.S. foreign policy. His latest book is Ill Winds: Saving Democracy from Russian Rage, China Ambition, and American Complacency (due out in June of 2019).

"I was an undergraduate during the final years of the Vietnam War, or what they call in Vietnam 'The American War,' and I have had a keen interest in Vietnam ever since then. However I did not finally visit there until I led this very same trip in 2012. Vietnam is a vibrant, welcoming, beautiful country with a rich culture and a painful history of war and confrontation with the West. Laos and Cambodia are as well mesmerizingly beautiful, and share in much of this history. This was a trip I hoped someday to repeat."

During this trip, Diamond will discuss the implications of Vietnam's rapid economic and social development, and the political past and present of these three countries and the dynamic region that is Southeast Asia.

- At Stanford: professor, by courtesy, of political science and sociology, since 1990; senior fellow, Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies, since 2002; former director, Center on Democracy, Development, and the Rule of Law, 6+ years; senior fellow since 2001 and fellow since 1985, Hoover Institution

What to Expect

We consider this program to be moderately strenuous and that is at times physically demanding and busy. Participants should be able to walk unassisted for extended excursions (typically two to three hours) over uneven, unpaved surfaces; up and down narrow staircases; and over high thresholds in high heat and humidity. In some instances, such as at temples and ancient sites, steps are a necessary part of the tour and may not have handrails. Average temperatures in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia range from the low 50s (°F) to the upper 80s, with humidity at more than 70%. Although all of our hotels and motor coaches during this program are air-conditioned, other traditional means of conveyance and most of the museums, temples, pagodas and ruins we visit are not air-conditioned. Participants must be physically fit, active and in good health. We welcome travelers 15 years of age and older on this program.
